NEARBY

OCEAN COUNTY BEACHES

With 42 miles of sandy coastline and a string of small, eclectic beach towns, Orange County delivers the quintessential Southern California experience. Sandwiched between San Diego to the south and Los Angeles to the north, “The OC” blends a casual, active lifestyle with laid-back sophistication. Catch a famous surf break, sunbathe, visit nearby family attractions, or shop these top Orange County beaches.

Huntington City Beach, Huntington Beach

The flat, wide beaches and desirable breaks along Huntington Beach gave this town its “Surf City, USA” nickname in the 1950s. Today, Huntington remains a wave-riding mecca and the most popular of the well-known beaches in the country—but surfing is not the only game in town.

Near the famous Huntington Beach Pier, you’ll see volleyball players spiking on the sand, runners, cyclists, and skateboarders. Wander to Main Street to find the latest in beach apparel or if hipster-chic boutiques and a gourmet food court.

Corona Del Mar State Beach, Newport Beach

In addition to Newport Beach’s pristine sandy beaches, this is known for its restaurants, nightlife, and waterfront and luxury shopping. Newport also offers multiple off-shore activities like Hornblower’s whale-watching and cocktail tours, as well as trips to the island town of Avalon via the Catalina Flyer.

Salt Creek Beach, Dana Point

If you’re traveling with kids, Salt Creek Beach makes beach-going simple. There’s plenty of available (paid) parking, lifeguards on site, a concessions stand, and a grassy area with picnic tables and a basketball court. Salt Creek is a popular boogie boarding and surfing spot, with a variety of breaks for every level (rent a surfboard or standup paddleboard from nearby Infinity Surfboards).

For a unique vantage point of Dana Point’s coastline, hop aboard a 118-foot replica of a 1770s private schooner that sails from the Ocean Institute. This educational institution also offers tidepool hikes, kayak tours, bioluminescence night cruises, and whale and marine life tours.

Catalina Island

Another world awaits you just a 13-minute boat ride from the coast of Southern California. From a lazy day on the beach, shopping in the quaint shops to simply exploring “the island of romance”, Catalina Island is a nice get-a way from the hectic pace of Southern California.
